Luke Reily-Riley

LUKE REILY FAMILY

On the gravestone in the Sunday River graveyard, Newry, Maine, is the statement of the time Luke Reily came from Ireland, which was the year 1789. Riley Plantation was named for him, so I was told by my grandmother, Mrs. Alonzo Fifield, who could remember him.

It was told that Luke Reily, a native of Newry, Ireland, was being educated in that country for the priesthood, but fell in love with a sweet Irish colleen named Anne (____). In order to marry her, they ran away from home, came to America and settled here where there were others from Newry, Ireland.

The Reilys lived first, as far as we can determine, in what is now Riley Plantation well up toward the headwaters of Bull Branch, in a locality called "Bumfaggin" where cellar holes can still be found. Later they moved down on Sunday River to what has since been called the Loren Trask place and in 1929 was occupied by Robert Bean.

Luke Reily's son Edward lived here, also a grand-daughter Sarah Riley Wilson (Mrs. Frank Wilson). Another grand-daughter, Martha Riley m. George Atherton and lived on a near-by farm.

Luke Reily spelled his name on deeds, Reily, and it so appears on his gravestone, but his son adopted the spelling Riley. The tradition lingers that Luke was much better educated than the other settlers of this region, and his manners were very polished and gentlemanly. One would infer from his gravestone which bears a Latin inscription, that he understood and perhaps was versed in Latin. He is also here given the title Esquire.

Anne Reily d. in 1836 only eight years before Luke's demise, but it is said he married a second time and had at least one child by his second wife. I have been unable to find any record of the marriage; however, there is reason to believe he did marry and have a daughter. Some years ago several strangers called upon Mrs. Herbert Kendall asking for Riley information, stating that the daughter of Luke Reily by his second wife, married a man by the name of Hill and their descendants lived in Hudson, N. H. These persons were some of the descendants, but their names are not now remembered.

In Lapham's History of Bethel Maine, under the Russell genealogy, it is stated that Persis Russell, daughter of John [5] and Susanna (Twitchell) Russell, m. (1st), Jeremiah Virgin and (2nd) Luke Reily.

Old residents of Newry say they had a daughter Victoria who m. a Rev. Mr. Hill, an Advent preacher. They had two sons, one a minister whose children live in either Milford or Wilton, N. H. It is thought Luke and Persis had a second daughter, but this has not been verified in any way.

The gravestones of Luke and Anne Reily are two slate slabs, closely placed. The inscriptions are as follows: Luke Reily, Esq., died Dec. 1, 1844, aged 74 years. He removed from Ireland in 1789.—Hic Jacet honor virtus prudentia.—Translation: "Here lie buried honor, virtue, wisdom/" In memory of Anne, wife of Luke Reily, who died July 29, 1836.

The Riley-Trask-Bean house, better known as the Loren Trask place, and now owned by Robert M. Bean. Probably built by Edward Riley. Photo 1946, by Mrs. Julia Fleet.

LUKE REILY, d. Dec. 1, 1844, ae. 74, which would indicate his birth as being 1770, in Ireland. He removed from Ireland, according to his gravestone in the Sunday River

Cemetery, in 1787 when apparently he was an adventurous young man of seventeen years. In all his official papers and on his grave-stone, his name was spelled Reily. Anne, his wife, d. July 29, 1836. Children:

1. Edward, b. 1806 (per death record), d. July 26, 1880, ae. 74; m. probably about 1827, Martha Coburn, b. 1800 ? d. Feb. 17, 1877, ae. 77, dau. of Moses and Esther Coburn, and a sister of Dorcas (Coburn) Marshall (Mrs. James Marshall), grandmother to Avis (Foster) Smith of Methuen, Mass. Mrs Edward Riley's will was proven July 3, 1878 and James F. Wilson of Newry was made administrator. Children:

1. Martha, m. George Atherton; res. Newry, Maine.
2. Esther, m. Oct. 7, 1858, John Spaulding; res. Pelham, N.H.
3. Frances J., m. George B. Thomas. She d. Sept. 17, 1857, ae. 18 at Burlington, Iowa.
4. Sarah Helen, m. James Franklin Wilson of Hudson, N.H. and had son Adelbert Wilson.

5. Ellen H. (also called Helen), d. Jan. 10, 1863, ae. 19 yrs.; unm.

6. Infant, d. Sept. 8, 1831.

2. Thomas Jefferson, lived in Mobile, Alabama; m. Nancy (____)?

3. Hugh, m. ____; ch.: James, Bert, and Fred, who were all in the roofing business in Boston.

4. Probably others whose names are now unknown; said to have been a large family.

Luke Reily m. (2nd) Persis (Russell) Virgin, b. May 13, 1799, dau. of John [5] and Susanna (Twitchell) Russell, and widow of Jeremiah Virgin. They had at least one dau. named Victoria who m. a Rev. Mr. Hill, an Advent preacher, and are said to have had two sons, one a minister whose children lived at one time in either Milford or Wilton, N.H.

LUKE REILY

"Luke Reily was said to be a younger son of an Irish nobleman who had been well educated and had traveled, but according to custom was left no money. I know nothing about his children except Edward who m. my grand-mother Marshall's sister, Martha Coburn. Her father was Moses Coburn. He is bur. in the Sunday River Cemetery.

"My mother, Lydia Ellen Marshall, went from Tyngsboro, Mass, to her aunt Martha Riley's to live while she taught school, and that is how she met my father, Stephen B. Foster, who was also teaching. I have heard him say that "Uncle Riley" as they called him, was the most perfect gentleman he ever knew."

—From a letter by Avis (Foster) [9] Smith of Methuen, Mass.
